W.G.M. Visits Champion

Last week Champion Chapter of the O. E. S. had an official visit from Mrs. Grace Tilley of Calgary, Worthy Grand Matron of the Grand Chapter of Alberta, at the meeting the degree team exemplified the beautiful degree of the order, and after a short address from the Grand Matron she was presented with a lovely gift by Mrs. G. Voisey. Later a banquet was enjoyed with covers laid for 30. The tables were decorated with floral designs. Visitors from Vulcan were present.

Present Of New Book

Members of the Champion W. L. assembled at the home of Mrs. R. D. Farries on Thursday evening, the 20th inst. to honor Mrs. Ray Johansen who expects to be leaving town shortly.

A company of about twelve to-k ten together and enjoyed a social intercourse.

After a short interval, Mrs. R. L. Baker, on behalf of the Women's Institute, presented Mrs. Johansen with Edna Ferber's new book—"Come and Get It." as a token of appreciation of Mrs. Johansen's valuable services during her association with the organization.

The recipient suitably thanked the donors of the gift for their expression of goodwill.

Attend Hospital Meet

Last Thursday Beave Griffin, J. Long and F. Boushier representing Harmony District met with the Carmangay hospital board and representatives from Barons and Little Bow municipality in the town office in Carmangay to discuss the hospital question. The Carmangay plan was explained as well as a talk given by Beave Reed, of Little Bow on hospitalization and state medicine.

Edenloff-Ruggles

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the parsonage on Sunday, February 16th, at 4 o'clock when Miss Lily Leone Ruggles of Wetwood district became the bride of Mr. Peter Walter Edenloff, of Dandee, Alberta. Rev. Peter Dawson officiating.

Miss Violet Chapman was the bridesmaid and Mr. Wayne Ruggles supported the groom. Mr. and Mrs. Edenloff will make their home at Dandee.

THE LIVING DEAD

Miss B. . . was one of those jolly, impulsive, gentlemen who had answered the call of her heart to care for the sick and bring relief to those who were suffering from tropical ills and other maladies.

As a young woman she said farewell to her country and sailed for the "unknown", where malaria, filaria, black-water fever and such specific tropical diseases are draining the vitality of many a native as well as European. Yellow fever had not threatened for a quarter of a century, but one never knows what's next in line.

The hospital, a great wooden structure, with galleries all round and beds for several hundred patients, became the centre of her life's ambition.

As the years went by and her work was appreciated by the staff and inmates alike, she reaped the reward of her noble, humane activities and was promoted to the position of matron of that busy place of Esculapian, as, in due time, it had grown larger and larger to accommodate the never ceasing flow of sufferers in this earthly vale of tears.

Happy and contented she was in her new occupation healing the sick with a cheer for the downhearted and applying those age old words: "Be unto others as you would that they should do unto you."

Time marched on and found the middle-aged woman still in the prime of life as her time drew near to go "Pro Patria". Just a matter of a year or two and she would retire to spend the rest of her life in the Mothercountry. The Queen bestowed upon her a medal for long, valuable service. All looked well and bright and a number of sleek Persian kittens even shared in the warm, comforting atmosphere and the prospect of a well earned rest amidst family and friends.

One morning, however, she awoke early, as usual, to resume her duties. The sun just rose to bid welcome to a new day. In a eucalyptus tree nearby, a feathered friend started its sweetest morning song on a chair in her own room, lay a great Persian cat, purring with contentment.

The matron commenced dressing to go to the public ward to see about a poor fellow who had been admitted the night before in a critical condition, but with a horrified expression she stared unbelievably.

If her beauty had faded over-nite it would not have impressed her so, neither would she have taken it so seriously if her hair had suddenly turned white, but this "Oh Lord what have I done that Thou shouldst smite me with that dreadful disease?"

If one knows the fate of those afflicted with this disease of the blood, practically incurable one can comprehend the volume, expressed in those incoherent words, uttered from a bleeding heart.

Quarantined! Quarantined! shouted the lepers of the Old and New Testament, who walked behind the mass or lived, expelled from the world, often despised as bearing the mark in consequence of sins committed.

But our modern society has taken drastic steps regarding those pitifully afflicted ones. The law is very strict in that respect and here too that law had to be obeyed.

Friends, no, the whole community rather, joined in gathering funds to build a private home for her in "Bethesda", one out of three places

FLEMING'S FOLLY

— BY — LAWRENCE A. KEATING

SYNOPSIS

The story opens with Link Fleming addressing a meeting of Boone County cattlemen, called together with the object of forming an irrigation company.

Roper Kilgo, the boss of the Rawhide and nearby ranges, who seemed to approve the plan, but was really opposed to it, had forced Rook Torney, a derelict mining engineer, whom Kilgo knew would be called upon to give his expert opinion in favor of the scheme, to reverse his earlier endorsement, and declare that irrigation in Boone County so far as Fleming's plan was concerned was only a new-fangled way to waste money.

The meeting terminated, but Rook Hamilton and his sister, Helen, Link and Kilgo stay behind and Helen asks Fleming questions about his irrigation plan. This angers Buzz, who accuses Fleming of trying to influence the district and, as he asserts, ruin his "spread." Buzz shouts to Fleming in an uncontrollable fit of anger, but Buster Townsend, Link's friend, is shot in the stomach, and Fleming is unharmed. Buzz is arrested and sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

Helen and Fleming form a partnership to provide irrigation for their own property.

Fleming goes home and studies the plans drawn by Torney to learn whether they could be adapted to a smaller scheme, such as that of Helen's land, and is satisfied it could be done. Feeling cold, he lights the pipe and there is an explosion that wrecks the house, burns it and the plans, and renders Link unconscious. He is rescued from the blaze by an employee.

(Now Go On With The Story)

He avoided her glowing eyes. "I don't know if you could raise the money. And suppose somebody hurt you? I'd never forgive myself." The visitor cleared his throat, but she turned on him, drawing herself to full height. "Mr. Berrens, your offer is not acceptable because Link—Mr. Fleming—has already agreed to build the dam. He has made a contract."

"A contract?" "Yes, Mr. Berrens, a moment, then show me the contract. You gave your word. Isn't that as good as anything written?"

"Sure it is. But—"

"Your word to join me in building the dam. What if we do have to wait till spring?" she burst out. "You and I talked about this in letters. You drew out of this, or sell to some company that will do the very thing you want to do to Silver Creek. No sir!" Helen cried, and stamped a small foot to the floor until her spurred leg like the clink of silver in a bag. "We're partners, and partners we stay."

He raised himself on his elbow. Berrens started to say something but Link's sharp gesture stopped her. There was a new strange light in his eyes that had not been there before. Despite the shining glare that covered his face, and the total lack of eyelashes or eyebrows, enthusiasm and something deeper, more lasting, dawned in his look. "Say! I'd sure like to be partners with you a long time after we build."

His words were drowned in a crash. Dumbfounded, youth and girl swung to view the bunkhouse window that had been shattered by G. I. V. Berrens' hurtling body. At sound of running steps that entered the bunkhouse, and a stentorian voice that boomed at them, they swung back startled.

"Link!" howled Sheriff Ames. Stephen as he poised, sign in hand. "I'm after the cat that bought dinner at Sam Pitt's!" He came crashing in a Winchester and slugs too. Gold teeth in his face, short, wears a coat like a horse hair, and a hat that the hunter shot Torney and mebbe sailed yore stove! Where'd he go?"

Scowls ticked away before they were checked. Fleming craned painfully out of his bunk to stand staring dazedly. "The window. Sheriff! And—And—gosh, get him! I'm CHAPTER VIII.

Three men who leaned indolently against the sheltering front of Sam Phillips' general store in Rawhide exchanged significant, knowing looks. By common consent they returned their eyes rearward to watch two riders whose mounts trudged with lowered heads through the furry dust of Main Street.

One lank, stanchion-like loafer (lumbered for a match-to-remind his pipe, "Firm of Hamilton & Fleming's" came to town, boys.)

A companion shifted his chew and spat into the street. "Can't be they're leakin' money again?" he postulated sarcastically. "Link started out like he'd corralled all the dough in the state. Anyhow, he mebbe' mugged he had enough to finance a fortune on the 'Goldman West!'"

They chuckled at this wit, their decision carrying faintly to the tall square shouldered rider. Annoyance fitted across Link's weather-brown face as he glanced quickly at his companion. But the quiet smile from the shadow of her Stetson's frayed brim was reassuring, telling they ignored the bores and rode on, at length turning their mounts toward the hitchrail before the one-story clapboard structure whose broad front window was lettered, "Stockmen's Bank of Rawhide."

The easy grace with which Helen Hinton alit from her saddle did not escape Fleming's admiring gaze, nor the movement of her willowy figure as she slipped unaided and straightened on the plank aside, worn but carefully blacked boots with little spurs jingling as she walked, peaked Stetson, and a pongee blouse, she presented a picture which more than one man in Boone County was prone to view with keen appreciation.

Link dismounted and fastened his horse's reins as he had already done. He stood for a moment, Helen had paused at the window of Irv Lane's jewelry store, and he moved to her side. His interested eyes sought the objects of her attention. Several diamond studded rings priced from one hundred to five hundred dollars dined in front of him, resting a card, "Special—20% Off."

Thrusting one hand into his trousers pockets, Link worked a ten and four-one dollar bill into a puppy ball. Hesitantly he indicated a ring whose stone flashed brilliant red and blue dots more vivid than those of his companions. "That's a nice looker, one."

She cocked her head to calculate the ring's effectiveness. "Yes. It's the very nicest I've there."

In the silence that ensued Link's eyes roved the window display downward to Helen's slender, capable left hand at her side. There was a look of sober reflection on his boyish face as he shifted weight. Unexpectantly his eyes met, but fluttered down with instant embarrassment. Fleming's sinewy nut-brown fingers crushed the money in his pocket into a harder, smaller sphere.

"That ring'd shore look nice on your hand," he ventured. "I mean, it wouldn't be half good enough, but it'd look—"

"Wait," Link shrugged, "when our dam begins to make alfalfa and stuff grow in that wasteland, maybe Irv Lane'll make a sale." He heisted, summoning courage. "Would you be—pleased?"

Helen tucked a wisp of chestnut hair under her Stetson. Her eyes met his, but sought again to the display of jewelry while her cheeks colored swiftly. "I didn't know you felt—mean, you never said you would."

"Say," he must stick out all over me. But I reckon," he added in quick contrition, "I got no right to bring this up until our dam gets finished and we've paid our debts and folks put meers! about Fleming's Folly. Then," he declared, his handsome face softening, "I'll be ridin' over to your Triple H some fine moonlight night. If I can work up the nerve. To ask a sort of—a sort of important question."

There was a momentary silence. "I hope everything works out all right, Link. If the Triple H comes prosperous I want to hire a lawyer to try to persuade the Governor to purchase the Bitter. Never a day goes by but I think of him in that terrible place." A shudder made her shoulders quiver. "Wouldn't it be better to let it go? I could somehow get him out of prison?"

Fleming gave her a sidelong glance. "He'd please you about as much as anything, wouldn't it? To have Buzz free, so he wouldn't have to serve the rest of his three years."

As boots sounded clear along the hollow sidewalk Link turned, his expression changing to slight disquiet. He nodded to Kilgo, whose round mottled face was a grin perversely genial.

"Spends' yore dough before yuh got it, Helen," he chuckled with tolerant comprehension of feminine vanities. "Wai, don't order a truckload of jewelry unless yuh want to go to somebody that don't throw away good hard cash back! Silver Creek into a lake. 'Course, Roper wicked, but pausing with feed while he and thick thumbs hooked in the cartilage belt that supported his Colt, 'I ain't sayin' I wouldn't be glad to get the hell out of that."

"I wouldn't think of such a thing," he assured quickly.

"Heck, I'm on an ironic look at Link," "How's the big dream program?" Or are yuh findin' out it's a nightmare?"

"Fine cracks!" Fleming rolled a cigarette and gazed with patent boredom down the street. "Helen, you excuse me a minute? I want to talk to you a minute to the west."

She nodded. The owner of the Box 50 Ranch watched him stride away, then, "That look like Helen, I'm pretty fond of yuh. Always was. Guess you kind of like me too, eh?"

"The saw Link and Sheriff Ames. Stopped in earnest conversation, and seeking escape, turned on her heel. "That reminds me, I must get a few things at Pickey's store."

Simple Plan Helps Them to Gain Greater Freedom from Colds for Their Families

EASY TO FOLLOW IN THE HOME

Mothers throughout Canada are now helping their families to have fewer, milder and shorter colds by following the famous Vicks VapoRub for Better Control of Colds.

Developed especially for mothers, this practical Plan represents the 30 years' experience of Vicks Chemicals and Medical Consultants in studying clinics by practicing physicians—resulting in every-day relief from colds to coast.

Here, briefly, are its three simple steps:

1. To Help Build Resistance to Colds—A few drops up each nostril. VapoRub is especially designed for the nose. Apply a few drops before colds start. "Use in time, VapoRub helps to prevent many colds and to throw off head colds the early stages."

2. To Help End a Cold Sooner—If a cold has developed, or strikes without warning, rub throat and chest at bedtime with Vicks VapoRub. VapoRub acts two ways at once: (1) By stimulation through the skin, like a poultice or plaster; (2) By inhalation of the vapors, direct to inflamed air-passages. Through the night, this combined vapor-poultice action relieves phlegm, soothes irritation, helps to loosen the phlegm.

What Vicks Plan can do for you and your family can be proved only by trying. You'll find full directions for following the Plan in any package of Vicks VapoRub or Vicks VapoBalm.

2 Things to Do TO EASE COLD INSTANTLY

Discomfort and Ache Go Almost Instantly This Way

1. Take two "Aspirin" Tablets with a glass of water.

2. Drink a full glass of water. Repeat treatment in 2 hours.

Instead of taxing your system with strong medicines for a cold, try the way pictured above—the modern, easy way. Your own doctor will approve it. And it takes hold of even a bad cold almost immediately. The "Aspirin" you take will start combating your cold internally at once; if throat is sore, crush and stir 3 "Aspirin" Tablets in a third glass of water; gargle twice. Do not nurse mouth.

"Aspirin" Tablets are made in Canada. "Aspirin" is the registered trademark of the Bayer Company, Limited. Look for the name Bayer in the form of a cross on every tablet.

Cold weather is still prevailing though somewhat milder, the temperature having gone up over the zero mark, but Monday night it dropped again to around thirty below.

Thursday morning everyone was cheered to realize that the thermometer had risen to near the freezing point and that a west wind was blowing. But the west wind hasn't got its own way yet, for the east is getting in another whack.

The FIRESIDE PHILOSOPHER

Winners and white horses talk.

There is an absolute for sincerity.

Without love, honesty is an empty shell.

If you absolutely can't pay, don't let it worry you.

LATITUDE concerns thought as well as experience it.

It tends to more to be pleasant about it.

It's a little hard to do with money.

It's a matter of if you must, but don't.

Horn—To Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Fraser, on Monday, February 24th, a son.

Lovers of gardens and flowers are looking forward to a good season. The cold weather of this month has kept everything dormant and when warmer weather comes there may be any setback, lines especially have started other years budging and then received a check about this time of the year.

Postponed to March 27th

A novelty dance will be held at the Harmony school, Friday, March 27th, under the auspices of the Harmony Blue Bird ball team. A quilt will be raffled and a prize will be given for the ballroom dance. Supper will be served by the club.

assigned for those smitten with leprosy.

They were good to her, very good indeed, as the blow was a hard and sudden one. People spoke fearfully about this sad and inexplicable case, but life goes on, incompassionate, indifferent and selfish as often the case is where our fellow creatures are concerned. The administrations of said places can prove the truth of this as they experience great difficulties in financing and maintaining those abodes of misery.

For the person in question, however, it was only the beginning of a tragedy, a waiting for death.

Living became a burden, while everything had looked so bright, so sunny and happy but a very short while before. Her case, of course, was not yet in an advanced stage, the suffering being more of a mental nature before the bodily pain develops, but who can endeavor to describe the inferno this fine lady was going through? For ever excluded from the world and all she held dear; in a little spot, with other living dead ones, where life ebbs away in compulsory solitude and loneliness.

It is the comparatively small happenings in life which often determine our destiny.

The tragic figure in this piece was very fond of cats. In the vicinity of the hospital there happened to be an old building for lepers, where some of the inmates were still housed.

Apparently her pets wandered away from their mistress at times to come back as carriers of the dreaded disease.

One thing is remarkable and outstanding, however no matter where on earth or how terribly sunk in their misery, despised and shunned by the rest of the world, there are yet helping hands to be found to lighten their sufferings and administer the service of love. Sisters of Mercy and other noble women whose names do not appear in the newspapers, whose qualities are not appraised at their grave-side, who do not hesitate, but devote their lives to this blessed work, and always, regardless of denunciation, with that historic vision ever before their eyes, a flaming cross in the heaven with the words: "In This Sign Thou Shalt Conquer."
